

Click here to print

MailOnline

Climategate U-turn as scientist at centre of row admits: There has been no global warming since 1995

By Jonathan Petre

Last updated at 5:12 PM on 14th February 2010

- Data for vital 'hockey stick graph' has gone missing
- There has been no global warming since 1995
- Warming periods have happened before - but NOT due to man-made changes

Data: Professor Phil Jones admitted his record keeping is 'not as good as it should be'

The academic at the centre of the 'Climategate' affair, whose raw data is crucial to the theory of climate change, has admitted that he has trouble 'keeping track' of the information.

Colleagues say that the reason Professor Phil Jones has refused Freedom of Information requests is that he may have actually lost the relevant papers.

Professor Jones told the BBC yesterday there was truth in the observations of colleagues that he lacked organisational skills, that his office was swamped with piles of paper and that his record keeping is 'not as good as it should be'.

The data is crucial to the famous 'hockey stick graph' used by climate change advocates to support the theory.

Professor Jones also conceded the possibility that the world was warmer in medieval times than now – suggesting global warming may not be a man-made phenomenon.

And he said that for the past 15 years there has been no 'statistically significant' warming.

The admissions will be seized on by sceptics as fresh evidence that there are serious flaws at the heart of the science of climate change and the orthodoxy that recent rises in temperature are largely man-made.

Professor Jones has been in the spotlight since he stepped down as director of the University of East Anglia's Climatic Research Unit after the leaking of emails that sceptics claim show scientists were manipulating data.

The raw data, collected from hundreds of weather stations around the world and analysed by his unit, has been used for years to bolster efforts by the United Nation's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to press governments to cut carbon dioxide emissions.

Following the leak of the emails, Professor Jones has been accused of 'scientific fraud' for allegedly deliberately suppressing information and refusing to share vital data with critics.

Discussing the interview, the BBC's environmental analyst Roger Harrabin said he had spoken to colleagues of Professor Jones who had told him that his strengths included integrity and doggedness but not record-keeping and office tidying.

Mr Harrabin, who conducted the interview for the BBC's website, said the professor had been collating tens of thousands of pieces of data from around the world to produce a coherent record of temperature change.

That material has been used to produce the 'hockey stick graph' which is relatively flat for centuries before rising steeply in recent decades.

According to Mr Harrabin, colleagues of Professor Jones said 'his office is piled high with paper, fragments from over the years, tens of thousands of pieces of paper, and they suspect what happened was he took in the raw data to a central database and then let the pieces of paper go because he never realised that 20 years later he would be held to account over them'.

Asked by Mr Harrabin about these issues, Professor Jones admitted the lack of organisation in the system had contributed to his reluctance to share data with critics, which he regretted.

But he denied he had cheated over the data or unfairly influenced the scientific process, and said he still believed recent temperature rises were predominantly man-made.

Asked about whether he lost track of data, Professor Jones said: 'There is some truth in that. We do have a trail of where the weather stations have come from but it's probably not as good as it should be.

'There's a continual updating of the dataset. Keeping track of everything is difficult. Some countries will do lots of checking on their data then issue improved data, so it can be very difficult. We have improved but we have to improve more.'

He also agreed that there had been two periods which experienced similar warming, from 1910 to 1940 and from 1975 to 1998, but said these could be explained by natural phenomena whereas more recent warming could not.

He further admitted that in the last 15 years there had been no 'statistically significant' warming, although he argued this was a blip rather than the long-term trend.

And he said that the debate over whether the world could have been even warmer than now during the medieval period, when there is evidence of high temperatures in northern countries, was far from settled.

Sceptics believe there is strong evidence that the world was warmer between about 800 and 1300 AD than now because of evidence of high temperatures in northern countries.

But climate change advocates have dismissed this as false or only applying to the northern part of the world.

Professor Jones departed from this consensus when he said: 'There is much debate over whether the Medieval Warm Period was global in extent or not. The MWP is most clearly expressed in parts of North America, the North Atlantic and Europe and parts of Asia.

'For it to be global in extent, the MWP would need to be seen clearly in more records from the tropical regions and the Southern hemisphere. There are very few palaeoclimatic records for these latter two regions.

'Of course, if the MWP was shown to be global in extent and as warm or warmer than today, then obviously the late 20th Century warmth would not be unprecedented. On the other hand, if the MWP was global, but was less warm than today, then the current warmth would be unprecedented.'

Sceptics said this was the first time a senior scientist working with the IPCC had admitted to the possibility that the Medieval Warming Period could have been global, and therefore the world could have been hotter then than now.

Professor Jones criticised those who complained he had not shared his data with them, saying they could always collate their own from publicly available material in the US. And he said the climate had not cooled 'until recently – and then barely at all. The trend is a warming trend'.

Mr Harrabin told Radio 4's Today programme that, despite the controversies, there still appeared to be no fundamental flaws in the majority scientific view that climate change was largely man-made.

But Dr Benny Pieser, director of the sceptical Global Warming Policy Foundation, said Professor Jones's 'excuses' for his failure to share data were hollow as he had shared it with colleagues and 'mates'.

He said that until all the data was released, sceptics could not test it to see if it supported the conclusions claimed by climate change advocates.

He added that the professor's concessions over medieval warming were 'significant' because they were his first public admission that the science was not settled.

Comments (977)

Newest

Oldest
Best rated
Worst rated

View all

Hey Texas - Dave. Funny story. I am not a big fan of the presumptuous Prius driver either. But be kind and respectful. Anyway - what "America Hating Entities" are you talking about? Some specifics would be great.

- Alex, San Francisco, 19/2/2010 17:26

Click to rate Rating (0)

Report abuse

Take note of the poster (Zeke) who spelled logical fallacy as logical "phalacy," and proclaims to have deep insight. This is typical of armchair Creationist types who could care less about science until it cramps their style.

This article ignores the fact that East Anglia was only one of many research centers, and the others are in concensus about the anthropogenic cause of warming. The "skeptics" are of course eager to cherry-pick that one research center as the nexus of all data.

Always remember: CO2 traps heat and Man is outputting far more of it than would naturally occur. The fundamental logic; that this results in MORE trapped heat should not be controversial. It was known since the 1930s and only became politicized when action was proposed.

Those who claim climate science is a for-profit scheme are willfully oblivious to the much larger profits from fossil fuel extraction. People rarely become scientists to get rich, but it's the opposite in the oil realm.

- Jim C., California, USA, 19/2/2010 06:53

Click to rate Rating 11

Report abuse

DrSteve wrote: "The man-made global warming theories have no mechanism to account for a cooling planet (period)."

Yes, they do (irrespective of your parenthetical punctuation). Many factors influence climate. For example, Earth has an irregularly elliptical revolution around the sun. Sometimes, the path brings us closer to the sun; other times, we are further away. The change influences global temperatures, so climate models account for those effects. That is, human activity can make Earth warmer than it would have been otherwise, but we might still experience cyclical cooling (or leveling). (My guess is that your doctorate is not a Ph.D. in a scientific field. I hope it isn't.)

Perhaps you are under the impression that any valid predictor must act alone and account for 100% of the variance in a dependent variable. Unfortunately, climate is more complex than that.

The data that you suggest were manufactured are publicly available. You don't need to rely on Dr. Jones.

- ncooty, Arlington, VA, USA, 18/2/2010 20:21

Click to rate Rating (0)

Report abuse

Has anyone else noticed that those who fervently believe that AGW is real science and that the world needs to do something to combat it, do nothing about it. If one believes in this nonsense, then they ought to install solar panels and wind generators on their houses, drive electric cars (or at least a Prius), and lead by example. What really happens though, is like the retired global warming proponent in my area who drives a pickup everywhere he goes using the tailgate as a billboard to espouse his views. Maybe not so bad if he needed the pickup to haul lumber or some such and only drove it occasionally, but he never hauls anything with his pickup and drives thousands of miles per month.

- Todd, 4 Corners, US, 17/2/2010 05:12

Click to rate Rating 56

Report abuse

I hope to assure readers in other parts of the world that not all Americans are as ignorant or mean spirited as the first 6 commenters.

There is very little doubt that the world as a whole is warming. The most logical explanation for this is human activity. You simply cannot release stored energy as quickly as we are doing now and expect it to have no effect. Most of our current energy conversion technologies are very inefficient and "leak" energy in the form of heat.

Even if global warming were not occurring employing conservation technology is the correct way to move forward. Doing so will extend the run of our species on this planet. Of course if the run of our species will be dominated by the attitudes of the 6 posters above maybe we don't deserve to live on a planet as nice as this.

- A Reader, KY USA, 17/2/2010 04:55

Click to rate Rating 259

Report abuse

We're all happy to use alternate energy sources, recycle, etc.

Just don't lie or try to scare us into doing it simply to advance Gore Inc.'s monetary objectives. Give us real, good reasons to change over, and common sense will move us to other sources of energy.

Gore's fear/lie campaign has only set back movement towards more 'green' technologies. Had he simply made a financial case, or shown how green tech would make our lives better (without fear/lies), his progress would be slower, but it would have been sustainable.

- faceinthecrowd, Holiday, Cambodia, 17/2/2010 02:00

Click to rate Rating 177

Report abuse

The views expressed in the contents above are those of our users and do not necessarily reflect the views of MailOnline.

Today's headlines

Most Read

- Profiteering chemists cash in by selling life-saving NHS drugs to European clinics
- Illegal immigrant killed six-week-old baby daughter he only fathered in bid to remain in UK
- Con Air UK: Flights take Polish criminals home - and the cost to you is £25million
- Ryanair 'abandons passengers' on wrong Canary Island
- Older brother arrested after boy, 9, knifed to death
- Woman loses FOUR stone in ONE day after doctors find extra weight is undiagnosed cyst
- Baby stabs herself in mouth with syringe found in Starbucks
- Gordon Brown likens Tories to the Hapsburgs
- Married gardener jailed for life for battering lover to death after finding out she was having an affair with another man
- Shaven-headed Saudi Prince in court charged with strangling aide in 5-star hotel room
- 'We deserved our punishment': What three Muslim Malaysian women said after being caned for having sex outside marriage
- BA cabin crew lose key court battle against cost-cutting as spectre of Easter strikes looms
- Barclays hits two million with overdraft rate hikes
- Retail sales in biggest slump in almost two years as heavy snow hits high street
- Judge slams RSPCA's court attempt to double £300,000 left in 'generous' will of animal lover
- How anti-social is your area? There's an Asbo-app for that
- 'We are dead, gone finished': Despair of 1,600 workers as British steel plant is mothballed
- Taliban launch counter-attack against Operation Moshtarak
- 'We're always ready for you': Undertakers ad at accident blackspot
- Lovers marry 27 years after splitting up as they rekindle romance on Facebook
- Police told not to chase criminals at end of a shift 'to cut overtime'
- Argentine anger as British oil rig moves in to Falklands
- £200 ransom demand after sleepy village pub's prize pigs are stolen
- BBC apologises for reading out wrong shipping forecast THREE times in one bulletin
- U.S. school used secret cameras in pupils' laptops to spy on them and their families at home

- Child patients 'washed with sick bowls' at London hospital
- Pilot who tried to take off three times over alcohol limit is spared jail
- Just two men in the world left alive who served in WWI after veteran's death aged 109
- MORE HEADLINES

'I thought I could get away with it. I thought I was entitled. I was wrong,' says deeply sorry Tiger Woods

The prince and the pauper: How former homeless photographer made Wills' black hair apparent

First picture of nine-year-old boy stabbed to death as 'older brother' is arrested over attack

Ryanair 'abandons passengers' on wrong Canary Island after landing in thunderstorm

'We deserved our punishment': What three Muslim Malaysian women said after being caned for having sex outside marriage

Gordon Brown likens Tories to the Hapsburgs as he goes on the attack over economy

Illegal immigrant killed six-week-old baby daughter he fathered in bid to remain in UK

Britain on course for coldest February for 24 years... as snow causes rush hour chaos yet again

Just £7,000 for female soldier in £500,000 sex case after she turned down offer to settle harassment claim

Flashpoint in The Falklands: Argentine anger as British oil rig moves in today and MoD beefs up our forces

How dare they say my perfectly healthy 5-year-old daughter is 'fat' and at risk of heart disease?

Family sues Starbucks after baby stabs herself in mouth with syringe found in coffee shop

Shaven-headed Saudi Prince in court charged with strangling aide in 5-star hotel room

Shouldn't you be on maternity leave? Surprised Prince Charles's greeting to heavily pregnant soldier awarded for bravery

Bus assault pensioner, 67, starred in second YouTube altercation last August... when he was Tasered by police

Two boy wizards and the £500m plagiarism claim against JK Rowling

Struggling IT engineer with a grudge flies plane into IRS building in Texas after feud with taxman

Did Britain know about Mossad hit? Israeli agent claims MI6 was tipped off

Tiger Woods tees up his big comeback day as camera crews gather for his major TV moment

'Please Rob Me': The website that tells the world when you're not at home

Tiger Woods' porn star mistress can't hold back the tears as she watches star's apology

Running for Parliament, the Italian showgirl who made Silvio Berlusconi smile again

'It's a little bit Brokeback Mountain': Olympic TV commentators accused over gay skater gags

Just follow the markings: The baffling set of instructions that confront workmen as they prepare to dig up road

MOST READ IN DETAIL

Find this story at www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-1250872/Climategate-U-turn-Astonishment-scientist-centre-global-warming-email-row-admits-data-organised.html

Published by Associated Newspapers Ltd
Part of the Daily Mail, The Mail on Sunday & Metro Media Group

© Associated Newspapers Ltd